Our Correspondents, By-Gone Days.

When the shadows are a-creeping, After the sun has sot: And the crickets are a-chirping Beneath the old hearth rock; When the clouds begin a-dropping The snow from out the sky. That the wintry wind is drifting, In heaps both long and high.

Then we heaped upon the fire A lot of hickory knots; As we hitched a little nigher, To watch the steaming pots; Where the pork and beans is billing Turnips and taters too,

And the sausage is a-frying, To a delicious hue. O, it was a royal pleasure, After the chores was done, To stretch our limbs at leisure,

Before the blazing cone, How many a castle—fancy
The leaping flames unfold,
Or up the chimney dances, Like fairy elfs of old, Wealth has its glittering trapping To gild its home and self; But the opening fire a-snapping,

Is dearer far than wealth: For the music of its snapping, And the roaring of its blaze, Brings back the scenes enchantis
